Wilson's Influence

It would hardly be possible to exaggerate the influence that President Wilson has acquired in Europe. He has at all times demanded a peace based upon an organization of free peoples for avoiding future war. His views have made a profound impression everywhere. He has not, of course, converted to his way of thinking all of the old-fashioned statesmen and diplomatists. They are hard to wean from their belief in the game of intrigue; and they cannot fully abandon the notion that one's own country can only gain through the disadvantage of other countries. But Mr. Wilson has gained an immense following among the unofficial people at large of all European countries, and most of the leaders, too, are with him. It will be remembered that the Allied statesmen at Versailles, on their part, and the Germans in appealing for an armistice, have all definitely accepted Mr. Wilson's outlines. The nature and the scope of the proposed League of Nations are yet to be determined. To many Americans it now seems best that the Allies should constitute themselves such a league, in advance of the assembling of the formal peace conference. They have been acting together in affairs of unprecedented magnitude; and it ought to be practicable for them to resolve their war co-operation into a peace-time union for the world's welfare. Having taken this step, they could grant the admission of other nations at such times in the future as circumstances might justify.

Rev. T. P. Middleton and wife, of Bucklin spent part of the week in this city the guests of Mrs. Middleton's mother, Mrs. Mary Rouse and family.

Mrs. Dick Hardesty, of Hannibal was the guest of her mother, Mrs. A. S. Maddox Tuesday of this week.
